KNOW THE WEATHER

By E. H. Sims

Why does winter bring with it gusty winds that often last for days?

Winter brings us cold air masses, which sweep down from the north pole, through Canada, and then southeast and east across the United States. Cold fronts move faster than warm fronts and this is one source of our gusty weather in winter.

Cold dry air is also heavier than warm, moist air, and therefore winter's cold winds are biting and penetrating.

It's a combination of many cold fronts and their characteristics and the heavier cold front air (wind) that combines to make us very much aware of winter winds.

SWINE TESTS SHOW NEED FOR PROTEIN

Pigs fed free choice do not do a good job of balacing their ration, nor do they gain faster than those fed complete rations, report scientists at VPI Agricultuarl Experiment Station.

C. C. Brooks and H. R. Thomas, of the Station's animal husbandry department, reporting on recent swine tests, say further that: feeding trace mineral salt did not increase rate of gain or feed officiency, but did result in a higher intake of protein when free-choice feeding was done. Soybean oil meal produced faster gains than peanut oil meal, while a mixed supplement gave more rapid gains than soybean oil meal.

A companion test was designed to further test the value of trace material feeding to swine on practical rations, to determine if trace mineral increased protein need, and to examine the protein needs of pigs at different ages. The scientists found that apparently trace minerals did not benefit pigs on a practical ration, nor did it appear to influence protein needs. From the date in the test, it also seems that pigs weighing 40 pounds need a 14% ration, pigs weighing 75 pounds should not receive less than 13% protein, and that same protein, in addition to corn and alfalfa meal, is needed by a 150-pound pig

A complete report of the tests is available in Technical Bulletin 138, Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, VPI, Blacksburg, Va
